OTAR'S DEATH

Directed by Ioseb "Soso" Bliadze

Short Synopsis

Keti (36) and her son Nika (16) find themselves in a precarious situation when Nika kills an old man in a car accident. The victim's family promises to refrain from pressing charges against Nika if he compensates their loss in cash. Within a single day Keti has to raise a large amount of money to prevent her son Nika from being imprisoned. The events come thick and fast. An unexpected turn gives the drama a tragicomical air.

Synopsis

In a residential tower in Tbilisi and an isolated home on the city's outskirts live two seemingly disparate families. Keti and her teenage son Nika live typical urban existences, busy yet unfulfilled; while miles away, trapped in bucolic boredom, Tamara teaches choir and tends to her elderly father, Otar. Yet fate conspires, and their lives irrevocably entwine, one late summer's night when Nika's car collides with Otar, setting in motion a series of events that will pile as much misery on one family as it will present possibilities for the other.

Made with a keen inventiveness and droll absurdism that belies its tragic subject matter, Otar's Death is a story of modern disillusionments and intertwining lives, and a study of the stunted and the restless in contemporary Georgian society. Giving equal weight to each perspective, debut director Ioseb "Soso" Bliadze opens an alluring and nonjudgmental window onto some of the lesser-seen places and lesser-seen people of his country's capitol.

DIRECTOR'S NOTE

This story is inspired by real events that happened to my friend. He had a car accident and an old man died. The old man's family then demanded money from my friend's family. I saw my friend suffering because he had killed a man and gotten his family into trouble. I witnessed his family desperately trying to raise the money and I also met the family of the victim. They had mixed feelings: on the one hand they were sad because their closest relative had died and on the other hand they were happy about the opportunity to receive a large amount of money because of his death.

Time passed and this story kept me thinking. I felt very sorry for my friend because he had killed someone. At the same time, I could understand the family of the old man who had lost someone very close to them and had tried to make their own life a bit better – which is tough in a Georgian village. Coming from a European country with a functioning infrastructure you might only see the bad side of it, the corruption, a family that tries to make money from the death of a family member, a police officer who arranges this deal. But I see two families who are victims of one incident and they are victims of a flawed system in Georgia.

You never know whether you will see your relatives again. This is why I wanted to make a film about it. Besides, – I have to be honest about that – I was not able to help my friend. This is my way to deal with it.

All these characters have a rough live and have to fight to get a bit of love of their other family members. In the end this tragic incident brings them all a bit closer together: the mothers and their sons.
